The Drainsige for wet Lands.

Farm drainage, though, in a rude form, as old as the ancients, is growing upon the attention of practical farmers who want to turn bad lands into good, to improve the fair they breathe, and to keep up with the progressive neighbor who is not above taking a hint from a book or a newspaper. The comparative cheapness of tiles, the ease with which they can be laid and the profit which follows their intelligent employment are considerations which are yearly adding largely to the drained acreage.

Most of our reading farmers are familiar with the splendid results that have followed the drainage of the great tracts of wet lands in England, where good, rich, highly productivesoil has been brought out of a chronic condition of unresponsive wetness. The profits realized on these investments would be thought large in any manufacturing business. Where the soil is abnormally cold in winter and hot in summer; where ventilation is abut off and decomposition retarded or almost entirely suspendedwhere the seed has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and receive essential nutriment, it has little chance to breathe and a profit he must restore his soil to life and health, and that wet lands can be so retsored by tile drainage is a demonstrated problem.

In a recent address before the Ohio Drainage Association Mr. G. M. Harrison holds that waste wet lands can be made equal to the best, and he says that tile drainage pays a profit of from 25 per cent to 100 per cent on the of from 25 per cent to 100 per cent on the investment. He cites what was done in a township of Johnson county, Indiana, where in five consecutive years before tile drainage was introduced the average yield of wheat to the acre was nine and half bushels, after tile drainage yield was nineteen and one-quarter bushels; the corn yield increased from thirty-one and one-quarter bushels to seventy-one and one-quarter. There was a deof about 60 per cent in malarial cases. Mr. Harrison summed up his address in these propositions:

these propositions:

That the drainage deepens the soil; that it improves the texture of the soil; it gives the soil the benefit of atmosphere circulation; it enables us to work sooner after rains; it makes the soil ten degrees warmer; it enables us to get at work earlier in the spring; it prevents grass from freezing out in winter; it enables us to get, the full tenefit of the ier-tillier, it was apply; it improves the quality of both pasture and hay; it gets our fields in a cleaner. healthier condition, and will greatly sid us in our battle with footrot in sheer; it will to a certain extent provent surit makes land less fiable to be in ured by the tramping of stock and haning with wagons, it will remove the poverty grass and tothe greasty improve our spouts hilbades, and clothe them with inxariant pasturage, which will greatly improve our stock. A military empire possesses manifold advantages when it comes to the construction of public works. The experience of Russia in building rathroads has repeatedly illustrated this fact, but seldom in a more striking manuer than in the construction of the Jainakpinek railway. The road is 120 mits long, and it was necessary to erect no fewer than sixty-nine bridges, but military bartallons accomptished the work in five months at a cost to the Government of only $17,000 a mile.

When financial distress comes or other reasons arise for exercising strict economy in dress, the fine wool of the Merino and other sheep of delicate and silky fiber is driven from the market, so far as the popular demand is concerned. The coarser and cheaper tweeds and other goods made of long and coarse, wools are then good enough to satisfy the general public. The prices of the finer staple sink to the level of, then fall below that of the coarser.
